How to use CASL to develop and work with user defined CAS

Developing a CASL program that is stored on the CAS server for processing is defined as a user-defined action set. Since the action set is stored on the CAS server, the CASL statements can be written once and executed by many users. This can reduce the need to exchange files between users that store common code. Note that you cannot add, remove, or modify a single user-defined action. You must
