Western Anti-Communism and the Interdoc Network | SpringerLink

Interdoc was established in 1963 by Western intelligence services as a multinational effort to coordinate an anti-communist offensive. Drawing on exclusive sources and the memories of its participants, this book charts Interdoc's campaign, the people and ideas that lay behind it and the rise and fall of this remarkable network during the Cold War.

Western Anti-Communism and the Interdoc Network: Cold War ...

Based in The Hague in the Netherlands, Interdoc sought to link up with allies across Western Europe, North America and beyond to become the central point through which anti-communism ranging from propaganda to covert action - could be organised. Drawing on exclusive sources, never-before-released material, and the memories of its participants, this book charts Interdoc's remarkable campaign, the people and ideas that lay behind it, and its rise and fall during the Cold War.

Moving beyond the realm of high politics, Scott-Smith makes a strong case that as a social network between Western security networks, as an ideological forum to bring Western Europeans together, as a consensus-building institution for Western values, Interdoc played a significant role in articulating a Western response to Communism. As such, it is a wonderful case study for a sociopolitical history of the Cold War.

In Western eyes, the communists aimed to encourage the disintegration of the capitalist West through reducing threat of anti-communist threat perceptions. From a predominantly conflict, the cold war thus turned into a psychological contest, predominantly in the public domain. Giles Scott-Smith, *Western Anti-Communism and the Interdoc ...
